Ph.D Title - A Bolster Recommendation System for Athletic Performance Optimization using Multi-Objective Data Prediction Model

The primary objective of the research is to create an advanced recommendation system that assists athletes, coaches, and trainers in optimizing athletic performance. The system will be based on a multi-objective data prediction model, which will analyze various factors and parameters relevant to athletic performance. These factors may include physiological data, training routines and historical performance data. The System seeks to revolutionize athletic training and performance enhancement by providing a personalized recommendation system. This system has the potential to empower athletes and their support teams with data-driven insights, ultimately leading to improved performance outcomes and a more efficient and effective training process.
